ABOUT THE PACKAGE, THE SEASON & THE STADIUM

Ireland go into the 2024 Guinness Six Nations Championship as reigning Grand Slam Champions after a near flawless campaign in 2023. Next year, the team welcome Italy, Wales, and Scotland to Dublin, while they are on the road to France & England.

First up, Andy Farrell's men are away to France in what was the game of the year during last year's tournament. Ireland then welcome Italy to the Aviva Stadium on 11th February, their first home game after the 2023 Rugby World Cup. The Italians pushed Ireland incredibly close in Rome last year, so this should be an enthralling encounter with lots of tries.

Wales arrive in Dublin on 24th February, they will be looking for revenge after Ireland comfortably beat them 34 – 10 in front of their home crowd last year. The Welsh have not won in Dublin since 2015, a record they'll be keen to change. Ireland then head to Twickenham for their penultimate fixture of the tournament against England who won't want to lose back to back home games to the men in green.

The final day of the tournament sees Ireland taking on Scotland over St. Patrick's Weekend in Dublin. The 2024 Super Saturday could be a title deciding day for Andy Farrell, so this game is expected to be hugely in demand. The rivalry between Scotland & Ireland has intensified in recent years, it will be particularly fierce as the two nations meet in the group stages of the 2023 Rugby World Cup which will be fresh in the memory.

THP are the sole official hospitality partner of the IRFU, and the only way to guarantee hospitality inside the Aviva Stadium. All three home fixtures of the 2024 Guinness Six Nations are set to be complete sell-outs, so booking early is advised.
